NOBLE TRAIT OF CHARACTER. It appears from the Nineteenth General Report of the British Emigration Commissioners, that the amount of money remitted by the Irish settlers in America for assisting the Emigration of friends in Ireland during the past year, was $2,287,422, and that during the ten preceding years the sum remit-ninety-five thousand dollars! We doubt whether family attachment has ever before manifested itself in such a manner, and on such a scale in the history of instions. Think of it! The great body of the Irish emigrants are poor laborers working on the railroads and canals of the country, and seeming to superficial observers to have scarcely any sentiments or feeling in common with their kind. They have their faults as all men have, and those faults, unfortunately for them, lie mostly on the surface, while those of many men do not .--They come to this country with nothing, obtain employment at once, are active, industrious, and successful; and the first use they make of their money is to provide for those they have left behind, and to bring them to a land where they too can obtain and enjoy the rewards of labor, and where the broken family circle may be reunited under happier auspices. Could nobles or princes show a more noble and royal trait of character?-It ought to cover a multitude of sins, and atone for an occasional excess in the use of the crathur. The contributions of all the churches in this ountry to Bible, Tract, Missionary, and Colonization purposes, from the establishment of those societies to this day, is $25,-958,537, a sum, which large as it is, has been nearly doubled by the enormous amount contributed in ten years by poor Irish workingpeople in the United Staes, to aid their poor relations at home, and to bring the old father and mother, the brothers and sisters to
